UNCLE PHIL'S STORY. "You must know, my dear young friend, that St. Louis was not always as big a place as it now is, and accommodations for man and beast were not quite so good fifteen or twenty years ago as they are now. When I came to the State, it had not even a start, and I settled up here under the belief that in a few years St. Louis would be nowhere. A short time however convinced me that I was in error, and I had to pay to that place an annual visit to lay in my stock of medicines.

"About those days, the tavern at which I stopped, and which was the principal one in the town, contained one long room, like the cabin of a steamboat, which served in the various capacities of a ball-room, a ball of justice, a common council room, a theatre, and, when the town was full, for a sleeping apartment for such of the surplus population as were not lucky enough to get accommodations in a more limited space. St. Louis then was a very anything having been lost or stolen in the promiscuous crowd of sleepers, whose sole conveniences were a chair, and a mattress on the floor. "Well, business once carried me there in midsummer, and, as the town was thronged, I was put with thirty or forty others, in the great accommodation room, and consigned for the night to my pallet of straw. I came in late that night, for I had met some old acquaintances, and we had made rather fast time of it, so that I found all the mattresses occupied, save the one reserved for me, and each occupant fast asleep. The landlord had given me a small piece of candle about one inch long to light me to bed, and as he was too sleepy or too lazy to get a candlestick, I took the tallow in my hand and marched up to my dormitory. It was a fear-Berages, Bombazines, Lawns, and many other desirable Mourning Goods.

A large and spleudid stock of White Goods, ing from the carcasses of thirty or forty sleeping men, and to me the sultriness was the more oppressive, because perhaps I had a little more heat in me, after leaving my friends, than I was in the habit of carrying. Marching up the aisle of sleepers, I soon found my bed, and I forthwith proceeded to 'unshuck.' Sticking my candle in the edge of my chair, I carefully laid my clothes on the back of it, so as to guard as far as possi-ble against all probability of their contact with the tallow, and I was proceeding to blow out my light, when, in my anxiety to save my clothes, the only suit I had with me, the thought occurred that I had better remove the candle altogether. After a glance around the room, I found this to be a matter of some difficulty. I saw that every chair was occupied. I was afraid to set it on the floor, and the fireplace was too far off to justify even the remotest hope of my ever regaining my couch, once away from it, in the dark. While I was in this quandary my eye fell upon the form of a large fat man, who was sleeping at a tremendous rate. about ten feet off. From the excessive heat that prevailed, he had thrown off every unnecessary article of clothing. He was breathing at the same time as hard, and snoring as loud, as if he were determined to extract every possible particle of enjoyment from those musical accompaniments.

An opportunity presented itself of getting andle th at was too tempti resisted. I knew that I should be safe from H AVING completed my purchases in New York and Philadelphia, I am now opening a large and varied stock of DRY, MILLINERY, and follow the extinguishment of the light and FANCY GOODS. All the goods having been amid the multitude of surrounding sleepers. Quietly advancing towards my snoring neighbor, I soon found a firm and permanent lodgment for my piece of candle, now consithe opportunity to obtain the NEWEST STYLES as derably reduced, upon a very prominent and very exposed portion of my "fat friend," and he was so profoundly asleep that I had no difficulty in finding a fixed basis for my burning tallow. As soon as I had by actual experiment satisfied myself that my 'illuminater' would in its upheavings turn neither to the right nor to the left, but would burn steadily where I had set it, I stole back to my place in bed as quickly as possible, and soon tried to get up a small gamut of extra noises with my nose and throat, but it was no go. Every incipient effort at a snore was sure to termi nate in a titter, and so I just lay still and watched the course of events. I never saw a piece of candle take so much time to burn half an inch. I thought the infernal tallow had the lives of nine cats, but burn on it did, and still snored on my fat neighbor. The light gradually approached the period of its extinguishment; I confess that it was the most exciting moment of my life. At last, to my inexpressible delight, I saw the sleeper give a twitch, and then for a moment all was still then followed a spasmodic action a little more broideries of every description, bought at a great violent; a calm of an instant succeeded, when the candle performed a circle in the air, expiring as it reached the floor, and the fat man, wide awake and perfectly erect, was heard of lightning! Anybody dead? I'm hit. Don't you smell scorched meat?"-New York Spirit
